Youth tobacco prevention program partners with National School Boards Association

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. – Oct. 9, 2014 – The Right Decisions Right Now (RDRN) youth tobacco prevention program has partnered with the National School Boards Association in a joint effort to convey a strong and effective anti-tobacco use message to more teens.

RDRN, which is funded by R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, is a successful, evidence-based curriculum designed to educate middle-school students about the dangers of tobacco use and offers ways for them to lead a healthy lifestyle. The online program is available free of charge to educators, as well as parents and youth-focused community groups.

“Schools clearly can and do play a role in catching young people before they start smoking by educating them on the dangers of tobacco use,” said Tom Gentzel, the association’s executive director.

Laura Leigh Oyler, who leads the Reynolds companies’ youth tobacco prevention efforts, said that RDRN aims to increase awareness and educators’ use of the program through its partnership with the association.

“Evidence-based programs like ours are very important in the fight against youth tobacco use, and I’d like to see RDRN in every health class in the country,” Oyler said. “This program speaks to teens in a way that makes sense to them, and it teaches them about self-esteem and ways to say no.”

Aligned with Common Core Standards, RDRN offers grade-specific activities, videos and posters, some of which are also available in Spanish. It includes parent information sheets so families can follow up and reinforce the program’s “Be Tobacco-Free” message.

More than 20,000 schools have used RDRN. The program is also used by groups such as the Boy Scouts of America, the Crosby Scholars Program and Big Brothers, Big Sisters.
